Editor-in-Chief DEEPAK NANAWARE	Editorial It gives me an immense pleasure to publish the current issue of Contemporary Research in India. The journal has consistently been publishing the quality research articles from different faculties from all the parts of the world. It believes in the research articles written in the pursuit of the knowledge and the articles which strive to innovate the novel concepts in the subject. The journal appreciates the articles written in the proper style and methodology because research propagates to the optimum people for the further development of the mankind. Moreover, the article written with the proper and necessary references helps to locate the status of the subject knowledge. There are many reasons which necessitates the idea: it helps to distinguish your own ideas from those of someone else; it cites different points of view; it validates what you are writing by referring to documented evidence; it informs readers of the scope and depth of your reading; it integrates information by assessing, comparing, contrasting or evaluating it, to show understanding; it refers to other research that leads up to your study; it highlights a pertinent point by quoting the original; it emphasizes a position that you agree or disagree with and finally it enable readers to consult the original source independently. I hope that the current issue will be appreciated by the readers. Dr. Deepak C.
