Editorial...

Plurality is defined as the condition of being plural or numerous. It is also defined as the state of having multiple, or a large group of people or things. It may be assumed in number of forms such as existence, approaches, nature, ideas, views, groups and so on. The idea of being plural is the natural phenomenon for the nature reflects diversity in its every presentation in the universe so far. It is an idea that adds additional approach of every aspect.

In terms of plurality of the thoughts and ideas, we as the intellectuals believe in the multiple views on certain issues and matters. Nothing is final in the world; everything discovered today appears in its novel form tomorrow. The pace and curiosity of development always aims at the creation and modification in existing ideas. The research articles in Contemporary Research in India projects similar zeal of creativity and exploration. The topics, on which the writers have pondered are on varied topics. They present different perspectives and approaches; however, the different thoughts i.e. plural thoughts have given ample scope to consider and look at the issue from different perspectives which aim at creating and sharing something novel to the world. I congratulate all the contributors of the current issue for the same.
